

Philosophy, Politics, Paranoia . . .

Beginning with the whirl of local elections and ending on the large scale of world affairs, the Senior year in Social Problems was one of awakening.

In team teaching, Seniors were assigned to work for the political party of their choice in the November elections. This undertaking proved so intriguing that many students continued working for their party throughout the year. Congressman Clark MacGregor was one of the highlight speakers of the year.

With never a spare moment, all seniors were baffled by problems in civil rights, foreign aid, and the functions of local, state, and federal governments in the U.S.

While Seniors were involved in modern America, the Sophomores delved into U.S. history and the events which shaped the United States of today. Among the events extensively studied were the major wars and treaties, laws and lawmakers, and a general introduction to American cultural background.

Historical mindedness, the attitude that there are numerous underlying causes behind an important historical event, once again vexed the Juniors. They were introduced to an entirely new way of thinking: that of the historian. Philosophical and moral trends of the past became more important than the memorization of dates and battles. In short, Man and his motivations emerged from the wings and stole the show.

Mr. Hoff "I have a passion for white socks"

Mr. Harmon "Well, things are a little unorganized ..."

Clark MacGregor lectures on effective campaigns.

Mr. Heltzer "He 'represents' ..."